Engineers-Mechanikón: distinct colour branch is the pink of the amaranth flower. The Engineer's emblem is the ram. It symbolizes the siege ram, of striking nature of ancient Greeks, which was used for violating the entrenchment. The ram, as a siege machine, was delivered by the Ancient Greeks and was initially used by the Romans and posterior by the Byzantines. In the "tactics" Leo VI the wise says that among the siege machines are included the so called "seige rams". For the protection of the city walls against the siege rams, packsaddles field by straw or sand were used. The head of the ram in various representations of the Ionians symbolized the force and the power. The ram in ancient time was the symbol of freedom. Frixus and Elli mounted on a ram in their attempt for escape from inner Asia to the free and democratic Greece. Ram fleece was the Golden Fleece, which Jason managed to seize with the help of Argonauts, and he killed the dreadful dragon, symbol of slavery, and he emancipated the daughter.

AN COR INNEALLTOIRI. ENGINEERS CORPS.

This badge was introduced in 1924 and has remained the same basic design since. The early badge had the word "Innealtoiri" (Engineers) on the collar of the badge. Officers wore silver and enlisted ranks wore brass up to 1942 when both ranks wore bronze. In 1953 the wording changed to "An Cor Innealtoiri" and it can be found in brass, bronze and staybrite. A 1942 series cloth officers badge was designed but not worn. The badge comprises a theodolite and a Torc (Gaelic collar)
